

Are you the dead?

Are you the dead
Who hover like soft sunlight
Round my bed,

Who warm the gloom
And flood with gentle quietude
This chill, dark room,

And did you start
This silent flow of peace
Within my heart?

Oh, is it you
Whom I so dearly love
And dearly knew.

Are you the dead?
"Oh no - love does not die,
We live!" they said.

Arvia MacKaye Ege

Into the fields of Spirit will I send
The faithful love we found on earth,
Uniting soul with soul.
And you will find my loving thought
When from the Spirit-lands of light
Hither you turn your seeking soul
To find what you would seek in me.

Learning to live with those who have died

What happens to us after we die?

Can we stay connected with those who have died?

How do we do that?

Can we help our loved ones who have died?

Can they help us?

In many traditions of the past and in eastern religions people have always sought answers to these questions.

And at one time western Christianity could also still help people orientate themselves about these matters.

But with the dawn of our scientific age much of this knowledge has been lost.

Here in Ireland some of the good traditions of the past live on. A wake of three days when everyone comes to pay their last respects is still the norm in many places.

And many people feel in their hearts that the connection with their loved ones continues after their death.

But we don't often talk about these questions.

In our conference we hope to share and listen and learn together so that we can help each other on this side of the threshold and beyond.
